The
in vivo formation of copper nanoparticles in the fungal pathogen

Candida albicans.

Copper is a trace element essential for cellular function, but it has harmful effects at higher concentrations.

The aim of this study was to investigate the in vivo formation of copper nanoparticles (Cu-NPs) in the human fungal pathogen Candida albicans. The fungal cells were grown in RPMI-1640 in the presence of 1-20 μM Cu-NPs for 2-4 days at 37 °C, and the growth was monitored by optical density measurement at 600 nm (OD(600)) and colony forming units counting (CFU) on agar plates. The structure and composition of Cu-NPs were determined using dynamic light scattering (DLS) with the Zetasizer, and using transmission electron microscopy (TEM) and X-ray photoelectron spectroscopy (XPS).

Formation of Cu-NPs was evident in the whole yeast population; the particles were spherical and mainly of single type. At 20 μM of Cu, the average diameter was 9.1 ± 1.2 nm. The formation of Cu-NPs was accompanied by a decrease in growth at 10 and 20 μM and a complete growth arrest at 20 μM . This study
