For instance: function test() { if(this.someProp === null) { return false; } return true; } if(test()) { alert('true'); } Obviously this is a pretty simple example and the alert will pop up since someProp will be null, but what if I actually defined this.someProp elsewhere in my code? It should be noted that I'm not asking how to make it work; I know I can just use a different variable name. I'm asking if there's a trick to call a function on a variable that isn't declared anywhere. A: You can use a try catch to execute your function as long as this.someProp is not null or undefined: function test() { try { if(this.someProp === null) { return false; } return true; } catch (e) { return false; } } Q: How to upload and change images through image source in Yii I am new to Yii framework, and I am stuck at one point. I want to upload images through a form in my view, and to change the image source through the form, and change it into a button. Here is my code : Controller
