President Donald Trump's pledge to cut off funding to "sanctuary cities" is facing new obstacles as some of his most ardent supporters have teamed up with liberal mayors and the Democratic National Committee to try to force Republican-controlled Congress to remove the phrase from a $1.3 trillion government funding bill. Trump's embrace of hardline positions like his plans to ramp up deportations of undocumented immigrants came as a surprise to some people who thought he'd be more moderate and inclusive of immigrants. His planned ban on refugees from Muslim-majority countries became an international controversy. The president offered a compromise in a meeting Thursday with Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer, D-N.Y., but the deal fell apart within hours. Trump has vowed to veto any bill that does not include money for a border wall. The expected fight over whether local police should be allowed to share immigration status with federal immigration officials has also riled some supporters. The Anti-Defamation League is calling on Trump to stop using that term, referring to cities that don't fully comply with federal detainer requests to hold immigrants who've been convicted of a crime. The group called the term inflammatory and has asked the Republican National Committee, which is a Trump supporter, to stop using it, saying the term "represents a vile effort to question or challenge the legitimacy of sanctuary cities." "Anti-Semitism is a troubling and serious issue that has no place in American political discourse," ADL CEO Jonathan Greenblatt wrote in a letter. Trump and other conservative Republicans have spoken broadly of wanting to punish "sanctuary" cities for shielding immigrants suspected of crimes by declining to hold them for deportation, but the policy varies widely depending on how many immigrants are held, whether they've been convicted and, at times, what crime they've committed. The push to stop funding sanctuary cities comes as Congress works on legislation to keep the government funded through the November midterm elections. Schumer and House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., are warning that they will prevent spending on the government from moving forward if the president's border wall is not included
